A Health Informatics Clinical Advisory Team (HICAT) &
Healthcare Conferences UK Joint Conference

NHS Informatics

Delivering the National Information Strategy at a Local Level

Monday 3 December 2012 ICO Conference Centre, London

“This strategy does not reinvent large-scale information systems or set down detailed mechanisms for delivery. Rather, it provides a framework and route map to lead a transformation in the way information is collected and used. It takes the needs of us as patients, carers, users of care services and citizens as the key driver for change. It provides the infrastructure to support the things that need to be done system wide but - recognising information technology is always advancing - it promotes flexibility and local innovation.”

The NHS Information Strategy May 2012

This one day conference developed in association with the Health Informatics Clinical Advisory Team (HICAT) focuses on delivering the National Information Strategy at a local level. The conference focuses on three key strands within the delivery of the information strategy; firstly patient access and control of their information, secondly, standards and interoperability and thirdly, experience, outcomes and innovation. Through case study presentations and expert speakers the conference aims to help you to move forward with implementing the strategy within your organisation or clinical practice.
